Objection was made by a number of Senators, and the bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

This bill is of interest to those engaged in the mussel fisheries of the Missessipel River north of St. Louis, Legislation of this kind has been urged by the United States Fish Commission and others in order to protect the pearl button industries. The bill provides that mussels under certain sizes shall not be taken, and that closed seasons shall be established.

Washington, March 2.—The State Depart-ment has not been notified of any purpose on the part of the British Government to on the part of the leaumbency of Lord further extend the leaumbency of Lord Pauncefote as the British Ambassaslor to this capital. It is known that the Ambassaslor himself is not informed upon this point; in consequence he has made all atrangements to depart for England at the end of this month.

The Ambussador's term has been twice extended beyond the period of service regarded as the maximum by the British Government. The extensions herefofore made were on account of the Ambassador's knowledge of the issues involved in the Venezuelan contention and in the Behring Sea negotiations. Now he figures as one of the principals in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, a subject still open, and regarded as fully equal in importance to either of those already mentioned, as sufficient to secure an extension of the Ambassador's activity here.
